

Paul is put in prison at Caesarea, but the Jewish officials give him permission to stand trial in Rome. They send him on a ship with a Roman guard named Julius, who is very nice to Paul.

While on the ship, the weather becomes stormy. The captain issues orders for all cargo be thrown overboard to try and help the boat stay afloat.

During the stormy weather, an angel appears to Paul and tells him that the lives of all the people on board would be spared.

After two weeks, the ship wrecks on a sandbar on the island of Malta but everyone is gets to land safely, just like the angel told Paul.

Paul is Blessed on His Trip to Rome

THIRDA HOUR

Paul stays on the island for three months. When another ship finally arrives, the people of Malta provide Paul and the other passengers with all the supplies they need for a safe journey to Rome.

Paul prays for one of the chief officials on the island who is sick and he is healed. He helps to heal other sick people.

As they are lighting fires on the beach to stay warm, a snake jumps out and bites Paul. He throws the snake into the fire and the poison does not harm him.
